Clare Bullock

Clare's love for all things woolly started when she was a small child. She has always been a maker, and has tried her hand at many things, but wool is her passion - a fascinating medium only restricted by the limits of imagination.

She has been developing her work since completing a City and Guilds in Feltmaking in 2011, but over the past couple of years has been developing her Travelling Cloth or 'sanity cloth' as she refers to it. "It is a personal journey, a visual diary, in other words a cloth that contains my joy, my tears, my fears, my strengths. Every stitch has an emotion, every pieced fabric a memory recorded."

Another part of her work also contains love and memories, not of her own but that of others. Clare works with families - their memories and emotions - to create very personal bespoke funeral urns for the remains of a loved one. "I feel honoured to be asked to make these final resting places for the people we love."

She has a large studio space in Sharnbrook, Bedfordshire where she teaches workshops on a regular basis as well as teaching at other venues around the country. She has exhibited and has work in private collections.

Earlier this year Clare had an article included in Maggie Grey's WOW Book 2. Clare considers it a real honour to have her first published work featured alongside that of such talented artists!
